

My Story

Steve Ingber has a busy life. He runs a business, helps parent four kids, and so he searched carefully for the right place to give his time.

“Hebrew Free Loan and I are a good fit for each other,” Steve said. “This agency helps people without a lot of red tape. It’s direct, it sets out to do things one person or one family or one business at a time, and it’s gratifying to help.”

Steve also works with the Marvin I. Danto Small Business Loan Program. “I’ve been in the shoes of some of our borrowers, on the brink of growing an idea,” Steve said. “But there’s a misconception that Danto loans are just for start-ups. What you have to be is Jewish, or majority Jewish-owned, with a dream and a good plan. That could mean you have an existing business that could take off if you invest in new technology, or expand in new directions with the help of an interest-free business loan. The common denominator is the owners or partners believe in the idea and do their homework.

“I think people will always need someone who believes in them and will invest in their future. I enjoy seeing people move forward. It’s rewarding to be part of that.”
